Philadelphia's Energy Industry Hits the Reset Button

"Philadelphia's energy sector may be moving closer to the cutting edge than it has been in some time.

The reasons include new owners for its oil refineries; its proximity to the Marcellus Shale; its legacy in power-grid management; and a federal effort to support energy-efficient building technology.

'Philadelphia could be on the forefront of upgrading the old infrastructure and turning it into a valuable platform for the energy industry and the energy world going forward,' said Stephen P. Mullin, a senior vice president and principal with Econsult Corp., a Philadelphia-based economic consulting firm."
